

BBT Week 3

Here we are at the start of week 3 of home learning. Last week I sent you on an exploration of how to take better photos with your phone, or with the camera you happen to have. I've seen some interesting results.

This week let's dive a little deeper. Often the objects of our everyday environment can seem mundane and uninteresting. You might ask how a simple thing as a cup or a paper clip can be an interesting thing to photograph. It's all a matter of viewpoint, imagination, and purpose.

For this week look at the objects in your room or home and think on how you could make an interesting photo while keeping it 'minimalist', ie: as much as possible, only the object itself is in the photo. Let's see what you can come up with.

Below I've included links where you might get some inspiration.

Images free to use:

<https://unsplash.com/s/photos/object>

A link to an article where a challenge was given to different photographers to photograph the same object.

<https://petapixel.com/2015/11/24/6-photographers-asked-to-shoot-the-same-objects-with-no-repeats/>

Here is an example from home:

